Good Morning Monarchs,

I have additional updates to provide related to online and in-person classes. While at this moment in time we may only be able to commit to offering classes and services online, at some point moving forward we will be able to add back in-person classes and services. Currently, it is too early to determine if that will be in the fall, which classes can safely return, how many classes, and under what conditions. It will be essential that we are thoughtful and intentional in our recovery planning process in determining these and many other issues. Just to emphasize again, our first priority will always be life and safety.

Over the weekend, I noted that we are beginning recovery planning, especially related to determining how and under what conditions we will return to in-person classes and services. Our incident command team is beginning to work on recovery plans in collaboration with the District. Later this week, WEC will be meeting to begin providing input as well.

I also want to invite you to share any questions or ideas you have on recovery planning with your deans. We are certainly all in this together and I want to make sure that we include everyone's concerns and ideas in the planning process. Deans, please send the ideas and questions to Meredith Stoops who can compile them into one list.

We are not alone in recovery planning. Later today, the Governor is expected to share more information about the State's plans. Also, the Daily News had an interesting article this morning about LAUSD's plans for online and in-person instruction, signally some of the changes that LAUSD is considering. We will continue to monitor these and other sources as they have important implications for our planning.

Thank you again for everything you are doing to support students and for sharing your questions and ideas.

Stay safe and be well,

Barry
