1	I could communicate with my nurse perfectly well (when they actually talked to me) but I never got any practice talking to doctors or giving report over the phone. I got to do it in my preceptorship, but I heard the school is getting rid of that program. I honestly learned so much from those hours that I logged. I think that there needs to be some focus on giving report to either doctors or phone SBAR report. I can't emphasize how scared I was to go into the bull pin at Kaiser to give an update to a doctor because I had never done anything like that before. Giving report to your nurse is one thing, giving report to a doctor is another thing completely. Maybe find a nice doctor to come into a skills lab and grill the students while they try to give them an update on a patient? Overall, the program was good. I passed my NCLEX my first try which is good. I just don't work well with the "intimidate and humiliate" mentality that most nurses and staff had. At any rate, I still graduated and learned something along the way, and that's all the matters anyway, right?	6/17/2014 5:50 PM
2	The market is not desperate to hire RN w/o BSN. Future R/N should be patient to get into a BSN program. Thanks	6/16/2014 6:06 PM
3	I would make more job preparation available throughout the last semester in nursing school. I felt ill prepared for interviews. At the interviews I had attended, when speaking too others who were interviewed, I was told they were given much more instruction about interview etiquette and skills for proper preparation. I would have been willing to pay for a workshop (as to not take hours away from class time) to prepare myself better for the job search.	6/16/2014 5:37 PM
4	Provide graduating students resources to find a job successfully. Seminars on how to make a resume/cover letter that will grab recruiter's attention, how to job hunt, mock interviews. My understanding is that certain colleges have alliances/contracts with hospitals that once they graduate those who qualify can be recruited by the hospital once the graduate is a licensed RN. This school has taught me the basics and I appreciate that but there are limited help to all the students to prepare them for job hunting. Some are getting advise some are not. It should be for everybody.	6/13/2014 11:33 AM
5	Allowing the students to see their test after taking it and seeing their mistakes, I believe is still beneficial. When doing practice NCLEX questions, the option to see the reasoning to answers is a big part of the learning process.	6/4/2014 5:10 PM
